Don't Lie Small!

A Wisconsin man has earned bragging rights as the champion liar of 2010 with this line: "I almost had a psychic girlfriend but she left me before we met." David Milz, 49, told The Associated Press he came up with the one-liner over the summer when he was joking around with colleagues. ...(1)... The call he received Wednesday was still a surprise. "I was just shocked when I heard I won," the Bristol man said. "Hey, it's a résumé builder."

...(2)... The liars' club is based in Burlington, a town of about 15,000 inhabitants about 35 miles southwest of Milwaukee. ...(3)... A lifetime membership costs $1, but anyone can submit fibs for free. About 500 entries came in this year from around the country, with most from the Midwest, club vice president Ed Impens said. He and two other judges sifted through the entries this week and each made a Top10 list. " ...(4)... It had all three of the things we think are important: It's fairly short, humour is very important, and it's timely," he said.

Milz is the superintendent of an elementary and middle school district in south-eastern Wisconsin. ...(5)... "I'm going to work it the other way — 'You can't pull wool over the eyes of a champion liar," he joked.

- A) He said he wasn't worried that his lying might encourage students to stretch the truth themselves.
- B) He thought it might be good enough to win the Burlington Liars Club's annual contest.
- C) Milz said they come up with jokes like that every day.
- D) The liars' club started in 1929 as a lighthearted way to honour the creativity and humour of good exaggeration.
- E) It has almost 2,500 members around the world, president Joel Weis said.
- F) Milz's entry was the only one that made all three lists.

The Happy Marriage Is the 'Me' Marriage

A lasting marriage does not always signal a happy marriage. Plenty of miserable couples have stayed together for children, religion or other practical reasons.

But for many couples, it's just not enough to stay together. They want a relationship that is meaningful and satisfying. In short, they want a sustainable marriage.

"The things that make a marriage last have more to do with communication skills, mental health, social support, stress—those are the things that allow it to last or not," says Arthur Aron, a psychology professor. "But those things don't necessarily make it meaningful or enjoyable or sustaining to the individual."

Isn't marriage supposed to be about putting the relationship first? Not anymore. For centuries, marriage was viewed as an economic and social institution, and the emotional and intellectual needs of the spouses were secondary to the survival of the marriage itself. But in modern relationships, people are looking for a partnership, and they want partners who make their lives more interesting.

Dr. Aron and Gary W. Lewandowski Jr., a professor at Monmouth University in New Jersey, have studied how individuals use a relationship to accumulate knowledge and experiences, a process called "self-expansion." Research shows that the more self-expansion people experience from their partner, the more satisfied they are in the relationship.

To measure this, Dr. Lewandowski developed a series of questions for couples: How much has being with your partner resulted in your learning new things? How much has knowing your partner made you a better person?

"If you're seeking self-growth and obtain it from your partner, then that puts your partner in a pretty important position," he explains. "And being able to help your partner's self-expansion would be pretty pleasing to yourself." The effect of self-expansion is particularly pronounced when people first fall in love. In another research, 325 undergraduate students were given questionnaires five times over 10 weeks. They were asked, "Who are you today?" and given three minutes to describe themselves. They were also asked about recent experiences, including whether they had fallen in love.

After students reported falling in love, they used more varied words in their self-descriptions. The new relationships had literally broadened the way they looked at themselves.

Having a partner who is funny or creative adds something new to someone who isn't. A partner who is an active community volunteer creates new social opportunities for a spouse who spends long hours at work.

Additional research suggests that spouses eventually adopt the traits of the other — and become slower to distinguish differences between them, or slower to remember which skills belong to which spouse.

All of this can be highly predictive for a couple's long-term happiness. One scale designed by Dr. Aron and colleagues depicts seven pairs of circles. The first set is side by side. With each new set, the circles begin to overlap until they are nearly on top of one another. Couples choose the set of circles that best represents their relationship. In a 2009 report, people bored in their marriages were more likely to choose the more separate circles. Partners involved in novel and interesting experiences together were more likely to pick one of the overlapping circles and less likely to report boredom. "People have a fundamental motivation to improve the self and add to who they are as a person," Dr. Lewandowski says. "If your partner is helping vou become a better person, you become happier and more satisfied in the relationship."

- 1. What are the most common reasons for staying together in an unhappy marriage? Give TWO examples. (a, b)
- 2. What can determine the quality of a marriage? Mention TWO of them. (a, b)
- 3. How has the institution of marriage changed lately? Mention TWO of them. (a, b)
- 4. What does our satisfaction within the relationship depend on?
- 5. Who were involved in Dr. Lewandowski's research?
- 6. How long did the research for students take?
- 7. How did the new relationship change the students' thinking?
- 8. What can a partner get from a public-spirited spouse?
- 9. What proves that partners often become similar? Mention TWO of them. (a, b)
- 10. Which circles would you choose from Dr. Aron's sets if you had a good marriage with your spouse?
